

City Life vs Village Life

Description

City Life

There are many benefits of city life, like:

- City life gives many job opportunities and good income. In rural areas, it is very hard to find jobs. Thus, people migrate to the cities to look for jobs and they get success as well.
- Another benefit of the city is better education facilities. In cities, there are many schools, colleges, and universities. So, people living in cities get the proper education.
- City life provides good transport service. Many means of transport like buses, metro, etc are available.
- Cities have another benefit of a good medical facility. We can find many skilled doctors and hospitals here. Even in case of an emergency, we can get to the ambulance facility immediately
- Females living in a city are more independent. They are not forced to stop education and doing jobs.

Village Life: –

There are many benefits of rural life:

- Rural life is completely pollution-free. We get fresh air, fresh food, and clean water in the villages. If we look at the air quality of Delhi, it is like poison.
- In rural life, people are very social. They are always ready to support each other in hard times.
- Rural people have preserved Indian culture and traditions. They celebrate every festival following all the traditions which generally are not followed in city areas.
- In rural areas, the crime rate is lower than in cities.
- Another benefit is the cost of living which is very low in villages. On the other hand, cities are very expensive. People living there pay lots of money for rent, transportation etc.
- Rural life is very peaceful. On the other hand, city life is hectic and stressful. People living there can be found running to survive.

Conclusion:

In conclusion, we can say that both city life and village life have advantages and disadvantages. If jobs, transportation, and health facilities are provided in rural areas, people will stop migrating towards the city.
